Camillus Sydney Fly, or C.S. as he was called, was a photographer in the 1800s. C.S. and his wife Mollie ran a successful photography business in the boomtown of Tombstone. We are used to seeing photographs with stories in the newspaper, but that was unusual 100 years ago when C.S. began producing photographs of famous people and events. Copies of his work are on display here at Tombstone Courthouse. C.S. Fly went with General Crook when he went to talk to Geronimo about surrendering and going to live on a reservation. While they were talking with Geronimo, C.S. was posing the Apache warriors and telling them to look one direction or the other. Most people considered this to be very brave. The Indians thought he was crazy! When C.S. returned to Tombstone, he sold copies of the photos to a national magazine and to people who wanted authentic photos taken of Geronimo and his warriors. Would you like to have been a photographer in Tombstone's past? What event would you have photographed?

Around the Courthouse

Look through the old-fashioned viewmaster called a stereoscope, that was popular entertainment before TV! You should be able to see a "3-D" image.

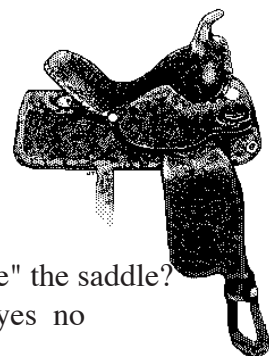

How many people were hanged in the courtyard? _____

Ring the fire bell & the school bell!
 Can you hear the difference in their sound?

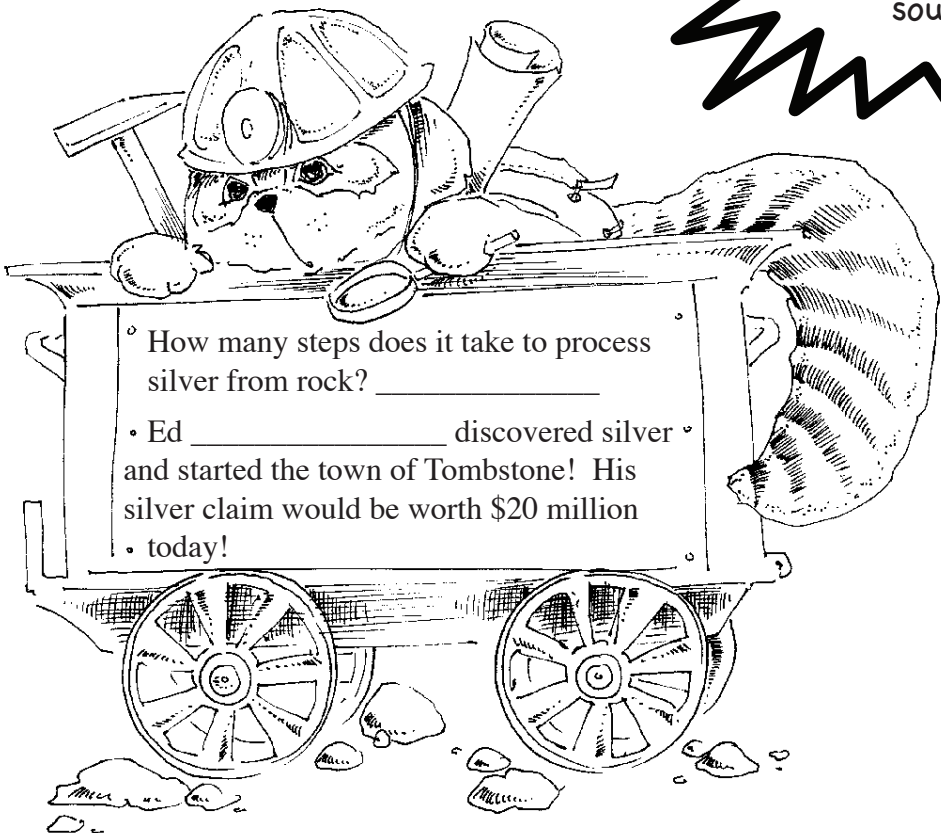

Cowboys really did use bedrolls for sleeping! This bedroll is a piece of canvas and a _____ stitched together. Old bedrolls are rare because when they got worn, the cloth was reused for other things. (Cowboys recycled, too!)

Did you "ride" the saddle?
 yes no

Did you:  slide off
 get off gracefully
 get thrown!
 (check one)

There are _____ different types of barbed wire here. Draw a picture of your favorite!

It was 'blown' open once, so it doesn't work too well anymore!

How was the fire hose cart pulled to a fire? _____
 _____
